

We all need an ear sometimes, and I happen to have two

By Mr. Motu, 49 years old, on death row

Without going into any specifics, I've maintained my innocence, and believe I have been wrongly convicted. But I'm sure many in this situation make that claim, so only time will tell. However, despite that, it does not make this any less terrible.

I have children and am heartbroken to be away from them. Luckily, our relationship is very strong, so that is a plus. It goes without saying that this is no place for any human being. Humanity calls for something different if society as a whole is to heal from whatever may have occurred or was taken away.

I've been a father for a long time and enjoy it. I've also worked with youth in both delinquency as well as mentoring prior to this present situation. This will be the first time I've ever been incarcerated or offered to be a connectdeathrow contributor, so, if this is your first time, we'll both have that newness in common.

Just a bit about me: I have a wealth of knowledge pertaining to physical fitness, will power, dedication, and having a winning attitude. That said, on the flip side, I'm a HUGE nerd. Comics, video games, anime, sci-fi, some fantasy, and collecting vintage action figures filled my pass time, which of course, my kids loved along with me.

Someone keen in the nerd world may have noticed that the "MOTU" in my name is derived from Masters Of The Universe...lol

I appreciate most types of music.... rap, hip hop, rock, alternative... favorites range from DMX to 80's Madonna, to Doja Cat, to Queen, so very open and diverse.

Whether you want to learn something new from this culture, about the situation here, talk nerd talk, or just vent, please feel free. We all need an ear sometimes, and I happen to have TWO.
